Mountain Crane & Kiewit Safety

Walk around any jobsite on any given day—even ones with experienced work crews—and you are likely to see some kind of dangerous situation or unsafe set up waiting for trouble.

A serious injury can happen in the blink of an eye. If equipment safety and operator training are not the first priority, accidents will happen. It is important to develop safety procedures on your site. A team approach is one of the best ways to education employees on risks and potential hazards.

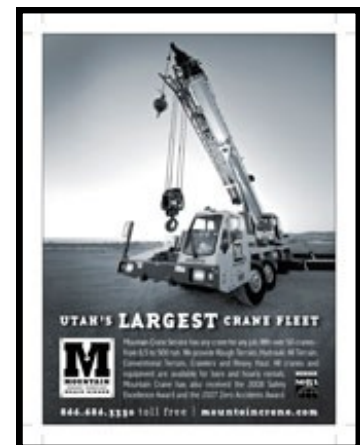

Mountain Crane understands the issues and risks of each job, and ensures that all employees have the appropriate training and safety certifications. Awarded the 2007 Zero Accidents Award and 2008 Safety Excellence Award through the Specialized Carrier & Rigging Association, Mountain Crane is involved in numerous safety training workshops, educational seminars and events throughout the year. By assisting clients, vendors and partners in understanding crane safety and operational procedures, accidents are greatly reduced and in most cases, eliminated.

Mountain Crane had the opportunity to take part in Kiewit's safety training held for regional supervisors in Salt Lake City. Kiewit put several employees through this training over the course of a few days. Each employee was trained in crane operation, machinery and procedures. Employees were given the opportunity to walk through one of Mountain Crane's rough terrain cranes and inspect it as they would any other piece of equipment delivered to one of their project sites.

In the News

Mountain Crane Service is featured in the Fall Issue of the U.S. Land Developer's Journal for various projects completed with Robinson Brothers Construction.

Any Crane. Any Job.

Mountain Crane Service has over 50 pieces of equipment available for operated or bare rental. Cranes range from 8.5 ton to over 500 ton capacity. Attachments such as super lift, Luffer, and jib extensions are also available.

Each addition to the Mountain Crane fleet is hand-picked by the company's owners. Equipment is maintained by a team of extremely well-qualified mechanics who are on call 24/7. Although we do not anticipate any breakdown, Mountain Crane is equipped to get your project up and going again as soon as possible.

For more information on each piece of equipment and
