Lifting a Tressil A Frame

- This A frame metal structure once stood as the head shaft tressil at the Daly West Mine in Park City, Utah. The tressil is 85 feet tall and weighs 76,000 pounds. The mine shaft was 2100 feet deep.

- In 2010, while completing Montage Deer Valley, the A frame started to lean severely. It was discovered that numerous abandoned mine shafts were causing unstable ground conditions. Because the tressil is a part of the historical registry, it couldn't be removed, so it was placed on it's side. In September of this year, Mountain Crane went in and moved it from Montage's private ski slope back to the original mining location.

Mountain Crane Team Training

The Mountain Crane Team was able to participate in an awesome training and fun-filled week-end up in Park City. The training included guest speakers, round table discussions, and team building exercises. The event ended with a marble run competition, with teams competing to create the longest track for a marble to run down. The Mountain Crane team is composed of so many talented, hardworking, and all around outstanding individuals and our company is happy to be able to have events like these to show how much we appreciate our employees. As you can see, the event was a blast!
